

World's first ambassador to technology industry

ADAM SATARIANO
Copenhagen September 3

CASPER KLYNGE, a career diplomat from Denmark, has worked in some of the world's most turbulent places. He once spent 18 months embroiled in reconstruction efforts in Afghanistan. For two years, he led a crisis management mission in Kosovo.

Yet Klyngé, 46, says his toughest foreign posting may be the one he has now: as the world's first foreign ambassador to the technology industry.

In 2017, Denmark became the first nation to formally create a diplomatic post to represent its interests before companies such as Facebook and Google. After Denmark determined that tech behemoths now have as much power as many governments — if not more — Klyngé was sent to Silicon Valley.

"What has the biggest impact on daily society? A country in southern Europe, or in Southeast Asia, or Latin America, or would it be the big technology platforms?" Klyngé said in an interview last month at a cafe in central Copenhagen during an annual meeting of Denmark's diplomatic corporations. "Our values, our institutions, democracy, human rights, in my view, are being challenged right now because of the emergence of new technologies." He added, "These companies have moved from being companies with commercial interests to actually becoming de facto foreign policy actors."

But after two years in the job, Klyngé is under no illusions of where Denmark's concerns figure in the minds of Silicon Valley executives. Denmark's population of 5.8 million is smaller than that of the San Francisco Bay Area. Fewer than 0.3% of Facebook's 2.4 billion global users live in the Scandinavian country.

Casper Klyngé is Denmark's ambassador to the tech industry

Silicon Valley companies and their leaders have given Klyngé a mixed reception. He has never met with Mark Zuckerberg of Facebook or Sundar Pichai of Google or Timothy D Cook of Apple. Danish officials said it was like dealing with an opaque new world superpower.

"We've been too naïve for too long about the tech revolution," said Jeppe Kofod, Denmark's minister for foreign affairs. So Klyngé's position is part of an effort "to make sure that democratic governments set the boundaries for the tech industry and not the other way around," Kofod said.

Denmark is emblematic of the many small countries that are grappling with technology's effects on their societies and are frustrated by an inability to meet with, let alone influence, the companies causing that disruption.

Danish officials have been particularly concerned by how technological change is causing challenges that have afflicted other Western democracies: the spread of false and politically divisive content on social media, questions about privacy and data-hungry services, cybersecurity and the low taxes the companies pay outside the US.

Andrew Cooper, a political-science professor at the University of Waterloo who studies diplomacy, said smaller countries had long needed novel ways to get attention from nations with more power. The Maldives, for instance, has hosted underwater cabinet meetings to raise awareness about climate change, while Sweden created an embassy in the virtual-world video game Second Life. What's surprising, Cooper said, is the extent to which Denmark is applying the strategy to private companies. "Denmark has to play a different game," he said.

But the obstacles Klyngé has faced in Silicon Valley have been humbling. He said it had taken nine months to sit down with a senior executive at one of the biggest tech companies, which he declined to name. He arrived expecting a frank conversation on issues agreed on beforehand, including taxes, cybersecurity and internet misinformation — only to be offered a headquarters tour, he said.

When the executive arrived later, he began a brief rant against European regulations of the tech industry, before saying he did not have time for the meeting, Klyngé said. Then the executive left.

As Klyngé was exiting the building, the executive called his mobile phone to ask him to wait. Klyngé thought there had been a change of heart.

Not so. "When I got back to the conference room he gave me a goody bag with a T-shirt and cap of the particular company," he said. He said Danish officials "laughed about this incident a lot afterward, but it says a lot about the mind-set of some of the companies in Silicon Valley."

Some tech companies said they were beginning to better understand Klyngé's job.

Brad Smith, president of Microsoft, said he spoke regularly with Klyngé, whose appointment he said gave Denmark "outsized influence."

Rushdie's Quichotte on Booker Prize 2019 shortlist

ADITI KHANNA
London, September 3

MUMBAI-BORN SALMAN Rushdie's tragicomic novel Quichotte is among six titles from around the world to be named on the shortlist of the 2019 Booker Prize for Fiction released in London on Tuesday.

The 72-year-old former Booker Prize winning British Indian novelist has famously also won the Booker of Bookers for Midnight's Children during anniversary celebrations of the prestigious literary award.

This year he is shortlisted alongside another former winner, Margaret Atwood, besides Lucy Ellmann, Bernardine Evaristo, Chigozie Obioma and Elif Shafak. "Like all great literature, these books team with life, with a profound and celebratory humanity," said Peter Florence, founder and director of the Hay Festival and chair of the Booker Prize judging panel this year. The shortlist was selected from 151 submitted books published in the UK or Ireland between October 2018 and September 2019.

"A picaresque tour-de-force of contemporary America, with all its alarms and craziness. Rushdie conjures a celebration of storytelling and language that will delight lovers of Cervantes, lovers of daytime television and lovers of life," was the comment of a five-member judging panel in reference to Rushdie's latest work, which is inspired by the classic Don Quixote by Miguel de Cervantes.

Canadian author Margaret Atwood is shortlisted for The Testaments, which the judges describe as "terrifying and exhilarating". Lucy Ellmann is shortlisted for Ducks, Neuburyport, Bernardine Evaristo for Girl, Woman, Other, Chigozie Obioma for An Orchestra of Minorities, and Elif Shafak for 10 Minutes 38 Seconds in This Strange World.

EU locked in 'long battle' against Chinese fraud

AGENCIES
Brussels, September 3

EUROPE'S "LONG BATTLE" against fake goods from China has become even more difficult with the upsurge in online shopping, where fraudulent and often dangerous products were being sold, an EU official said on Tuesday.

"The biggest, most worrying border is your home," said Ernesto Bianchi, head of the investigations directorate in the EU's anti-fraud office OLAF that tackles customs fraud and counterfeit goods. Bianchi, speaking at a news conference, was quick to point out however that he was referring to "gangs of fraudsters" in China, and not China itself. "They are affected as we are also" by fraud, he said, noting that criminal organisations often used the same trade channels to smuggle unwanted toxic waste from the West into China.

OLAF has had successes blocking shoddy Chinese ripoffs, including a $5.5-million shipment of counterfeit shampoo seized earlier this year with the help of Colombian and Mexican authorities.

Electric car sales fall for first time after China cuts subsidy

BLOOMBERG
Hong Kong, September 3

GLOBAL ELECTRIC-CAR sales fell for the first time in modern history in July after China scaled back purchase subsidies, highlighting the role government assistance is having on the burgeoning market.

Monthly sales worldwide fell 14% to about 128,000 plug-in passenger electric vehicles, Sanford C Bernstein said in a report on Tuesday. Sales declined in China and North America, while rising in Europe.

Growth in China, the biggest producer and market for electric vehicles, is slowing down as a reduction in EV subsidies and a cooling economy weigh on consumers' buying decisions. China government scaled back funding for individual purchases of new-vehicle starting from June 26 to encourage carmakers to focus on product innovation.

Tesla led the passenger EV market with sales of about 20,000 units in July

While electric vehicles account for just a few percent of the car market, automakers are betting on the segment for future growth.

Slowing demand for gas guzzlers has plunged automobile markets worldwide into a decline, led by a historic drop in China. For the first seven months of the year, the global electric-car market showed growth of 35%, Bernstein said. The researcher estimates that full-year sales will rise by 23% to 48% to 2.4 million to 2.9 million units in 2019.

"Unsurprisingly the growth momentum halted in July amid subsidy cuts," Bernstein analysts said in the report. "Despite expected short-term weakness in 2H19, we continue to be positive on long-term EV demand."

Tesla led the passenger EV market with sales of about 20,000 units in July, followed by BYD Company, the Chinese brand backed by Warren Buffett.
